The ideas of popular sovereignty, personal liberty, and equality before the law were familiar to Frenchmen and had been transmitted to various quarters of Europe before the meeting of the States General in 1789. In England they had been practically in effect for a century, but the forms of monarchy surviving there had obscured the fact to all save a few critical observers. The speculative minds of the eighteenth century had been busy with these ideas for nearly fifty years, and among a certain intelligent class they had received a wide circulation and a considerable acceptance before the period when our study begins. This fact explains whatever success the French had in disseminating their political faith. It explains the appearance in each of the neighboring states, at the outbreak of the Revolution, of a group of sympathizers who attempted to convert their fellow countrymen to the new regime. The intellectual movement had begun which in time was to revolutionize the political and social structure of all the European nations, a movement which in our day seems to be witnessing its final manifestation in the great empire of Russia. The real influence of the French, then, after the outbreak of the Revolution of 1789, lay, not in implanting among their neighbors a new doctrine, but in forcibly attacking the ancient structures and in so weakening them as to give room for the ideas already implanted...
