AGAIN resume my pen to thank my dear Parker for his obliging letter from Ely Grove. I am happy to hear my mother is well, I well, and the dear girls. I took the first opportunity to go on shore, and enquire for my dear Juliet, I was informed she was at home, and was immediately admitted into the parlour. She was sitting at the harpsichord, and her lover was leaning against her chair, while the lovely warbler, and her fair companion, were entertaining him with that sweet duet, Hope! ibou Nurse of young Desire. Her fine hair was carelessly dressed, which shaded her lovely forehead; the glow of pleasure was on her cheeks, when I approached her;...
