Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: .The report made by the Johnson Excelsior Company to this board, on the suitability of ailanthus for excelsior follows: We have delayed somewhat in making a report on the sample of ailanthus timber you sent us from Madison, Indiana, owing to the fact that with the repeated tests we made we were not satisfied, and are hardly yet satisfied with the results from this timber. We find that the timber does not work free and does not make a good quality of excelsior, being more or less brittle and inclined to chip. This is caused by the grain of the timber. Now we have often found in making a test on small lots of timber such as you sent us, where we were compelled to kiln dry, that the quick drying process killed the life of the timber, hence the test did not prove satisfactory, but afterwards with the same timber we found by cutting a car or more and letting it air dry which requires from four to six months depending on the season of the year, that the timber turned out a very good grade of excelsior. This might be the case with the ailanthus wood, and we would not care to say at this time that the ailanthus wood would not be suitable for excelsior, but if you would care to do so, and could have a party at Madison get us out a car, we would be willing to pay the market...
