There was indeed plenty to concern him in connection with the mysterious aeroplane that nightly circled the region, always accompanied by that strange explosion. Seems to me I can smell something queer like burnt powder, Bud presently remarked. Do meteors explode when they hit the earth, Hugh And would they send out a rank odor like that I dont happen to be up in the doings of meteors, Bud, answered the other, but I should think it might be something like that. Well all take a look after breakfast, and see what we can find. Perhaps it may surprise us. This seems to be a general all-around surprise party for the lot of us. We were taken aback to find Ralph here in the old shack; he had his surprise when he watched those two men carry on so queerly; then we had the shock last night of hearing thunder and seeing lightning when the sky was clear; after that, the fellow looking in at the window startled us. You were a little surprised your self, I reckon, Bud, at your success in trying out your stability device as applied to aeroplanes. And now comes the discovery that one of the air craft is skimming around here nightly, doing some stunt that we cant understand yet. We ought to call this Camp Surprise, then, announced Ralph. Thats what, echoed Bud. Now let us go in again, suggested Hugh. It seems as if the fireworks might be all over for this particular night. Even the aeroplane has gone off where none of us can hear the motor working any longer. Perhaps she dropped to the ground, remarked Bud. There might be...
