The first way of its wider diffusion was by recitation of the story-tellers. It was their business to give pleasures of imagination to the people through their ears, when even the few who could read would also listen with enjoyment to a tale recited with dramatic energy. When the play of Pericles brought one of Gower s tales upon our stage in Shakespeare s time, John Gower himself was supposed to speak its Prologue in his chosen measure of eight-syllabled verse. His words then recalled to mind the old way of reciting as well as reading. The actor who, dressed as Gower, came before the people, said to them: - To sing a song that old was sung, From ashes ancient Gower is come; Assuming man s infirmities To glad your ear and please your eyes. It hath been sung at festivals, On ember...
