This time-traversing story opens in 11,000 B.C. with a first-person tale rendered in high archaic fashion but with clear psychological self-awareness. Ayuba, a clansman shepherd from a time just outside of recorded history, relates the terrible destruction of his family and his herd. Ayuba's story continues throughout, but it is the discovery of this man's poem (the oldest writing in the world) that incites the events in 2004. Flashing forward 13,000 years to an Iraqi academic's bedroom, the novel's modern thriller-style plot begins. Dr. Elman Darshi is trying to convince his wife that Saddam Hussein's Ba'athist agents are not in fact coming for them in the night. The song itself is yet another layer in the literary quality of the novel and works as the novel's philosophical centerpiece. The poem is lyrical, mystical and shockingly secular-this in particular causes a great deal of controversy once the poem is rendered for the Arabic-speaking world. Ayuba's narrative is essentially a fantastic hero story. After the dissolution of his people, he travels into the Beyond relating his experiences and the...
