Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Astrophysical Journal, Vol. 41: An International Review of Spectroscopy and Astronomical Physics After a long and painful illness, which had greatly restricted his scientific activity for many months, Julius Scheiner, a senior observer at the Royal Astrophysical Observatory at Potsdam, and extraordinary professor of astrophysics at the University of Berlin, died on December 20, 1913, at Potsdam. He was born at Cologne on November 25, 1858, the son of Jacob Scheiner, a painter of landscapes and architectural subjects of that city. Julius Scheiner attended the elementary schools at Deutz, a suburb of Cologne, later entering the Realgymnasium in the city. His interest was early aroused in physics, partly by the genius of his teachers in that branch, to whom he acted as an assistant. Upon passing his Abiturienten examination in the spring of 1878, he entered the University of Bonn, devoting his attention chiefly to mathematics and natural science. He had as a schoolboy visited the famous observatory at Bonn, and the interest then developed soon led him to turn his attention to astronomy as a career. The traditions of the institution established by Argelander and then directed by Schonfeld doubtless had their full influence upon the young student.
