CHAPTER XI Back to camp--At Cedar Mountain--Receive my discharge from the army--Remain in camp at request of General Jackson--Exhibit my marksmanship to General Lee at his request--I report to General J. E. B. Stuart--The Second Manassas battle. Early in August I got a hospital leave, and while yet on my crutches I went back to camp to resume my duties at headquarters. Many of those I had known in the valley campaign were asleep on the fields of glory around Richmond, and there were many vacancies in the ranks. But the morale of the army was unsurpassed. I took eleven sharpshooters and crossed the Rapidan River, about four miles above where the railroad crosses it between Gordonsville and Manassas, and circled in toward the rear of Pope s army, while it was encamped near Cedar Mountain. As I was looking over the valley from the top of a hill, in the direction of the enemy, I saw a squad of thirty odd Yanks in the front yard of the residence of a Mrs. Taliaferro, about a mile from my point of observation. I saw that I could approach very near them without being seen, and concluded to reconnoiter their position and ascertain their mission in that region. We rode close up and hid our horses behind some straw stacks, nearly in front of the house, and then crept up to the hedgerow and peeped over. Two men were on duty with the horses,...
